Proposal for International Conference "Pre-Qin Thinkers: Philosophical Thoughts and Debates", 15-16 December 2016, CUHK Hong Kong

Aesthetics of Sound: Consummation of Confucian Musical Discourse

PARK, So Jeong Nanyang Technological University

Abstract

This paper explores the music theory in the Book of Music, Yueji, as a consummation of Confucian musical discourse. The Yueji is not a homogenous anthology but rather a fine collection of various Confucian musical discourses on sounds and music. However, the essential questions were raised in the Yueji, such as how music comes into being, what makes music is so influential, and what physical and psychological foundation of music and some significant answers were attempted. For example, an unique framework of $sh\bar{e}ng$ ($\mbox{\mbox{\mbox{\it Phi}}}$, sound), $y\bar{i}n$ ($\mbox{\mbox{\it Thi}}$, tone) and $yu\dot{e}$ ($\mbox{\mbox{\mbox{\it Phi}}}$, music)," was conceived in "the Root of Music," the quintessential chapter of the Yueji, which can be developed into a relevant aesthetics of sound and music from a cross-cultural perspective. I will try to rehabilitate the theory of music of Yueji and consider it as an alternative theory of music to explain a link between music and morality which is missing in the recent music aesthetics of the West.

Keywords: Book of Music; sound; music; Confucian; aesthetics; ethics