科目簡介：

This is a writing-intensive introductory course aimed at training students in the basic skills needed for philosophical reading, thinking, and writing. The course introduces principles of philosophical argumentation and critical thinking, along with techniques for philosophical writing. The instructor and students then jointly employ these principles and techniques to analyze and discuss selected philosophical problems. Students will be required to apply the methods of argument and writing skills introduced in the course to compose several short argumentative essays.

學習成果：

1. Demonstrate competence in reading comprehension, critical evaluation, and argumentative writing with respect to at least three philosophical topics.
2. Demonstrate competence in writing a short philosophy essay that explains a problem and then states and defends a thesis concerning it.
